

Thomas wins Senate confirmation 52-48

Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Judge Clarence Thomas narrowly won Senate confirmation for the Supreme Court Tuesday night, overcoming extensive accusations of sexual harassment to become the second black justice in the court's history.

Thomas has gained crucial help from conservatives in the 52 to 48 vote, the first in this century for a successful nominee to the high court. The outcome ended one of the angriest, most emotionally charged confirmation battles in the court's history.

Thomas' confirmation strengthens the already solid conservative majority on the court, where liberals will be outnumbered seven to two. The court is expected to continue moving to the right on issues such as abortion, separation of church and state and the rights of criminal suspects.

Immediately after the vote, President Bush called Thomas with congratulations. Thomas had watched the vote on television at home.

Thomas was a wonderful inspiration, and you had the overwhelming support of the American people," Bush said according to press secretary James Fitzwater. "You have a lifetime of service to your country ahead. Well done."

support from 41 of the Senate's 43 Republicans and 11 Democrats: Sens. Sam Nunn, Wyche Fowler, Charles Robb, J. James Exon, Alan Dixon, Richard Shelby, John Breaux, J. Bennett Johnston, David Boren and Ernest Hollings. Sens. James Jeffords and Mark Hatfield cast the only Republican votes against him.

It was the closest vote for a successful Supreme Court nominee since 1888 when Lucius Q. Lamar went onto the bench on a 32-28 vote.

With the outcome in doubt until the final hours, Vice President Dan Quayle rushed back from a political trip to Ohio to sit as the presiding officer and cast a tie-breaking vote if necessary. It wasn't needed.

It was an uneasy decision for many senators, forcing them to judge between the different stories of accuser and accused.

Thomas had been accused by law professor Anita Hill of making unwanted advances and humiliating her with lewd remarks a decade ago when she worked for him at the Education Department and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Her surprise charges brought an abrupt halt to the Senate's plans to vote on Thomas' nomination a week ago.

Thomas emphatically denied the charges and complained he was the victim of a "high-tech lynching." The nation was transfixed as the accusations were spelled out in explicit detail and debated in nationally televised hearings.

A federal appeals court judge, Thomas was nominated to succeed retired Justice Thurgood Marshall. He would become the nation's 106th Supreme Court justice and the second black, after Marshall, to sit on the high court.

Thomas hearings prove inconclusive

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — After all the Senate still doesn't know. Despite doubts and bitter divisions, Clarence Thomas was narrowly confirmed Tuesday night to the justice of the Supreme Court, ending a dismissal or proof of the harassment accusation he raised against him. The vote was 52 to 48, the closest confirmation of a justice in 110 years.

Thomas' confirmation was a surprise here we began — uncertain about the truth lies," said Sen. J. Van S. Cohen, R-Maine.

But lurid televised hearings on the man's charge against the Supreme Court nominee had provided political insulation for the man who run things at the Capitol against assertions that they didn't take sexual harassment complaints seriously.

That contention had stirred an outcry a senator could ignore only at his own peril, and telephone calls from home choked Senate circuits.

By nightfall seven days ago, the safe majority lined up to confirm Thomas, for the court had dwindled to the point that Republicans didn't dare gamble on the vote they could have forced. So, they had to accept a week's delay.

On Tuesday, time was up, and all that had been learned was the graphic, seamy details of an accusation dating back a decade to Thomas' days in the Department of Education and at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The bottom lines didn't change: She said he'd harassed her, he said he hadn't; somebody was lying and nobody could say who it was.

At the end, it's going to be the credibility issue all over again," Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., said when the decision was postponed for the hearings. "So the clouds are unlikely to lift."

The argument that carried the day was summarized by Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., a Thomas opponent, who said that what concerned her as much as the sexual harassment charge was that the Senate did not appear to be taking it seriously.

She said Tuesday that instead of a public service, the reopened Thomas hearings became a public spectacle in which his supporters went on the attack against Anita F. Hill, the accuser.

Enjoy something you enjoy that is useful, Monson says

For example, prepare prayer-meals for the future, have faith, enjoy your friends, know that families are not just according to who you are, President Thomas S. Monson, counselor in the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at Tuesday's devotional.

President Monson said to be an example to the believers, as the apostle Paul told his disciple Timothy. "I challenge, what an opportunity to be, literally, an example unto the believers," President Monson said. "That's the charge I have with you today, to be an example."

President Monson said that now is the time to prepare for the future. "The time for decision arises, the time for preparation is past."

President Monson said to always be prepared.

"I never know when you are going to be called upon to give an account of your own personal behavior," he said.

"I ponder and pray about the things in life, said President Monson. "Very few are trivial. Most of them have far-reaching consequences."

When making decisions about the future, President Monson said he counseled BYU students as he counseled missionaries with whom he worked, by asking for three commitments.

President Monson counseled students to be the best at what they pursue as their life's work. "Do not settle for mediocrity. I firmly believe that once we've had a view of excellence, we shall never again be content with mediocrity," he said.

President Monson told students to study something they enjoy, that will challenge other aspects of their intellect and that they can use to earn a living to provide for their families.

Second, President Monson said to marry in the temple. "Marry someone who can take you or with whom you may go to the House of the Lord," he said. "And then keep yourself straight in keeping the commandments of God, and you shall have that privilege."

The third commitment is to always be active in the church, said President Monson. A formula that will help guarantee success in keeping this commitment is to pay tithing, he said.

"Every bishop will tell you, from his personal experience, that when the membership of this church pays tithing, honestly, faithfully, they have very little difficulty keeping the other commandments of God," President Monson said. "It is a benchmark commitment."

President Monson said by keeping these commitments, "you, indeed will qualify for greatness."

One of the great adventures of BYU is to have fun in a proper way, said President Monson. "Enjoy this great period of youth in your lives."

Times of fun can lead to tragedy or destiny, said President Monson. "In the events and the activities of our lives, we must beware of that type of fun which would destroy our ideals and which would cause us heartbreak."

President Monson takes time to sign autographs after speaking at Tuesday's devotional.

Students said they don't walk to the crosswalks because it's out of the way. Tenant Amy Atkins, 18, a freshman majoring in nursing from Hesperia, Calif., said it takes too long to go down to the crosswalk.

Freeman said The Glenwood has considered putting in a skywalk but the cost is too high. He said students should be smart in crossing the street. "I don't want to see my tenants dodging cars," he said.

However, students said they will continue to cross the street, and Atkins said people probably won't do anything until someone gets hit.

Expansion plan proposed for library

KAREN S. HAMMON
Universe Staff Writer

Shelving strategies, research methods, staffing procedures and student and faculty convenience are some of the concerns the library's current expansion proposal has addressed.

The proposal for the addition to the library states the library would be entirely underground, moving north toward the Abraham O. Smoot Administration Building and west toward the J. Reuben Clark Law Building, said Randy Olsen, assistant university librarian for collection development and public service.

Olsen said the proposal states that the addition would consist of an underground bilevel structure consisting of 300,000 square feet, in addition to the existing 425,000 square feet. The proposed addition to the library would create a centralized periodical facility to contain all bound, unbound and microform copies of periodicals.

Sterling J. Albrecht, university librarian, said 10 to 15 faculty members were involved in developing a good cross section of ideas during the scheduled open hearings Oct. 9 and 10.

Eric H. Christiansen from the Geology Department said he was opposed to the separation of the journals and the texts. In the geology field, a centralized facility would make research harder because the journals and texts are used in conjunction with each other, he said.

Christiansen said that before he attended the hearing he took a quick, informal survey of individuals in the Geology Department. On the whole, he said, he did not find that many people agreed to the centralized periodical proposition.

"The separation of material is what makes things really difficult," said Thomas K. Hinckley from the geography department. "Part of our problem with finding things is that there are too many places to look."

Police say campus pranks may lead to criminal record

By J. SHANE OSGUTHORPE
Universe Staff Writer

University Police feel it ironic that the majority of sophomoric acts on campus occur at Deseret Towers where the majority of residents are freshmen.

University Police incident reports show that a generous dose of what legislators call "criminal mischief" takes place every week at DT. While many of these pranks seem innocent and harmless to their perpetrators, law enforcers often awake students to reality with various misdemeanor and even felony charges.

"I would dare say the majority of 'dumb foolish things' done on campus are done by freshmen," said University Police Cpt. Michael Harroun. "It could be that it's their first time away from home or that they fall in with 'the wrong crowd' but whatever the reason it is a problem."

"Dumb foolish thing" is the term used by University Police to describe such criminal mischief.

Police and university officials assume the students involved with the detonation of several dry ice bombs near DT on Sept. 27 were unaware that what they were doing was classified as a third degree felony. Seven students were arrested and charged with possession and detonation of an infernal device.

The term "infernal device" is familiar to those who followed the recent Alta View Hospital hostage incident. Richard L. Worthington, arrested for his actions which include the killing of a nurse, is also charged with possession of an infernal device. While police admit there is a clear difference between a two liter bottle with dry ice and the dynamite allegedly used by Worthington, the criminal records of those involved in the two incidents read "infernal device."

According to police reports, when a student using a blowgun to shoot darts from his fourth floor room at DT on Sept. 26 was questioned by police, he said he was "just having fun." Part of that fun involved a dart being shot one-half inch deep into another student's back as he sat on a bench four floors below "Q" hall.

Now, the student quoted as "just having fun," has a police report on file that reads "aggravated assault."

"Most of the violations are a result of plain stupidity, but there are malicious acts as well such as vandalism and fires," Harroun said. "As we deal with the problem, we hope it stems more from ignorance than maliciousness," he said.

BYU Director of Public Communications, Paul Richards said that there is no blanket rule in dealing with students who have committed felonies. "We take each case individually," he said.

A person's standing at BYU doesn't necessarily depend on the court decision of those charged, Richards said. University punishment for anyone accused of a felony could range from a warning to suspension from school.

Jury selections begin for Watkins trial

NEW YORK — About 125 people were selected Tuesday as prospective jurors for the trial of four young men charged with the stabbing murder of Brian Watkins, a tennis fan from Utah, who was slain in a subway station last year.

The 125 were those remaining from a pool of 400 after Justice Edwin Torres, the trial judge, asked who would not be able to sit for six weeks. From these, lawyers will try to pick 12 main jurors and about four alternates.

Jury selection is expected to last about two weeks.

The four 19-year-old defendants from Queens are Pascal Carpenter, Johnny Hincapie, Emiliano Fernandez and Ricardo Nova.

They are charged with Watkins' murder on Sept. 2, 1990, in the subway station at Seventh Avenue and 53rd Street in Manhattan's theater district.

Watkins, 22, had come from Provo with his family to attend the U.S. Open tennis tournament. The family was on its way to dinner in Greenwich Village when attacked by a gang of eight young men.

Karen Watkins was punched in the mouth and knocked to the floor when she tried to intervene after one of the youths slashed her husband Sherman's rear pants pocket and stole his wallet containing $200.

Brian, 22, was fatally knifed when he tried to help his mother.

Mideast peace talks close to a final OK

DAMASCUS, Syria — Secretary of State James A. Baker was on the verge Tuesday of sealing arrangements for a Mideast peace conference to open in Lausanne, Switzerland, on Oct. 29, U.S. and other diplomatic sources said.

Even as Baker was holding extended talks with Syria's president Hafez Assad, the unidentified sources said the Swiss city would be the site, barring last-minute hitches in Baker's diplomacy. The open questions rested primarily on the issue of Palestinian participation. Following open negotiations, the parties will decide whether to continue in Lausanne.

In Jerusalem, Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy confirmed Israel had reached preliminary agreement with the United States on terms for convening the peace conference. Another Israeli official, requesting anonymity, said the terms included an assurance that the Palestinian delegation would be represented by residents of the West Bank and Gaza.

Switzerland was an acceptable choice because of its long history of neutrality, officials said.

S.L. water tank breaks, smashes homes

SALT LAKE CITY — A 500,000-gallon water tank poised in the foothills above an exclusive Salt Lake County neighborhood collapsed Tuesday, destroying two homes and damaging several others. No injuries were reported.

Officials said a metal flange from the first tank punctured a second tank as an estimated 250,000 gallons of water cascaded down a major east-west county thoroughfare, said Salt Lake County Sheriff Aaron Kennard.

Witnesses reported seeing furniture, fences and other debris washing down the street as the six-foot wall of water crashed through homes and yards shortly after 4 p.m.

"The metal sides of the tank split open and the top just fell through," said Lonnie Johnson, director of Salt Lake County Public Works Department. "The walls of two homes washed out, and the roofs just fell in."

Some residents said they saw water trickling from the tank before they heard several loud booms. The flood also downed power lines and damaged three transformers, cutting off electricity to the neighborhood, Kennard said.

Sheriff's deputies said the water swamped basements in 10 homes. Johnson expected cleanup operations would continue for several days.

Utah industries puffing less pollution

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah industries discharged 1.79 million pounds of potential cancer-causing chemicals into the air in 1990, down from the 1.82 million pounds generated the year before, according to records submitted to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Neil Taylor, emergency-response manager for the Utah Division of Environmental Response and Remediation, said the state's industries reported emitting 15 chemicals that have been identified as either possible, probable or known carcinogens.

There have been no detailed studies on the risk these chemicals pose to Utahns.

Nina Dougherty, representing the Utah Chapter of the Sierra Club, said both environmentalists and state officials have delayed action on these pollutants until Congress establishes a method to determine acceptable levels for these chemicals. This was done when the Clean Air Act was renewed earlier this year.

Lazy farmers a benefit to hungry Soviets

KHIMKI, U.S.S.R. — Lured by the prospects of free food, hundreds of Soviet citizens are taking to the fields that lie outside Moscow. They have found that fields that were supposedly harvested are still fat with food.

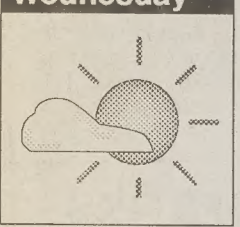

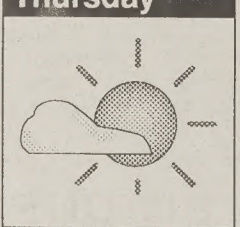

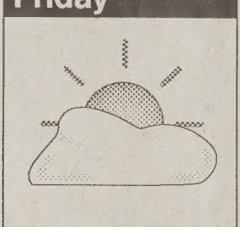

Irina Mikitko, a 67-year-old singing instructor, is one of hundreds of people who have been getting off work each evening, catching a bus to the outskirts of town and foraging fields now abandoned by farmworkers, who are completing their usual half-hearted stab at bringing in the crop.

"Our farmers are lazy. It is a pity," said Mikitko as she trudged to the bus stop in the darkness Monday evening, one of hundreds still found foraging the Path of Communism collective farm for carrots.

"Three carrots cost three rubles," said Alexander Korolov, 21, as he hefted two burlap bags of carrots across his shoulders. "Here it is free."

Ramshackle harvesting equipment and a lack of initiative by clock-watching collective workers are a couple of reasons why Moscow stores are almost empty, why basic commodities are scarce and why Western nations are planning to send billions of dollars in food aid this winter.

Lawyers offer services free of charge to defend Utah's abortion statute

By VIKKI K. CARLSON
Universe Staff Writer

Two national anti-abortion lawyers and an Alabama law school professor have offered their services free of charge to the Utah Attorney General's office to help defend Utah's anti-abortion law.

Using their free legal help could save the state hundreds of thousands of dollars in fees.

The attorney general must choose a new law team by Friday on the order of U.S. District Judge J. Thomas Greene. Utah's previous law firm, Jones Waldo Holbrook & McDougall, stepped down after a possible conflict of interest between the state and one of the plaintiffs was revealed.

The three offers are similar in that all three lawyers have offered to help Utah defend its abortion statute for free. The Attorney General's Office has so far declined their help.

James Bopp is an attorney for the National Right to Life Committee and is working as a deputy attorney general in Louisiana to defend Louisiana's contested abortion law.

Bopp's law firm wrote a letter to Attorney General Paul Van Dam offering to "assist in the defense of the Utah abortion statute at no cost to the State of Utah."

Bopp volunteered to serve as lead counsel or to assist counsel in the case. Bopp has also raised close to $200,000 in Louisiana for defending Louisiana's abortion law.

David Smolin is a professor at Cumberland Law School in Birmingham, Ala. His letter to the attorney general said he also was willing to offer his time to the state in defense of the abortion position. He asked only for reimbursement for any expenses.

Smolin told the attorney general he would be "happy to work with or under any individuals who were truly committed to a strong defense of Utah's important abortion prohibition."

Smolin said he wouldn't wish to lead the defense because of his professional responsibilities, but said he would want to be an active part of the case.

He said he has reviewed Utah's abortion bill and provided legal expertise during its formation and passage.

The other attorney who has offered his help in the law's defense is Clark Forsythe of Americans United For Life.

Forsythe made an offer similar to Smolin's and Bopp's but could not be reached for comment.

Communications professor Laurie J. Wilson said she agrees with the confirmation. "But I think all were hurt by the proceedings. The Senate Judiciary Committee bogged it. I think the public is getting sick of the Senate finding these controversies before elections and using them as campaign boosters. Especially when they are doing it on our time," she said.

Public relations professor Brad E. Hainsworth said, "I agree with the confirmation, but the process was misused and perverted for political reasons. This was not our system of government at its best, it was democracy at its worst."

Hainsworth called the process a part of a "watershed effect." "After the Robert Bork hearings, the recent events with Congress' bounced checks and unpaid restaurant bills, the extensive coverage of the Thomas hearings and the debauchery with the violation of committee agreements with the leak of the FBI report, I expect to see more calls for limited terms not only in the Senate but in the House of Representatives as well," Hainsworth said.

Holly Foster, a second year law student from Pocatello, Idaho, said she was neutral on the subject of the Thomas confirmation, and while she disagrees with Thomas politically, she saw no reason for him to be denied confirmation.

Alex Dushku, a second year law student from Sacramento, Calif., while agreeing with the confirmation, called the process a "fiasco" and said it was the worst moment in Senate history.

GENERAL EDUCATION

WHAT ARE THE STUDENTS OPTING FOR?

Source: General and Honors Education Office.

Math — GE subject of choice

By JENNIFER REX
Nurse Staff Writer

Students are taking math in foreign language classes to fulfill general education credits.

According to Cecelia Fielding of public communications, there was a study done in 1989 to determine the number of students taking the general foreign language courses in general education.

The study, which was done by the Office of Honors and General Education, shows that in the 1984-85 year, 60 percent of the students chose to take foreign language classes and 40 percent chose math. In the 1988-89 school year, only 30 percent were taking foreign language classes and 70 percent chose math.

Math is becoming more popular," said. Over the past five years there seems to be a trend going in that direction.

Alisa Cuthbert, 18, a sophomore from Orem majoring in health promotion, said she didn't want to take a foreign language because she only had one year of experience in junior high. "I didn't want to jump into the program here," she said.

Alisa Landon, administrative as-istant for general education said, "I know some students take math because they have more math experience in high school. Usually they take math or foreign language because their majors require those skills."

"If students have extensive background in foreign language from high school," said Landon, "they will be more likely to take language classes at BYU."

Kimberlee Sorenson, 19, a sophomore from Murray majoring in home economics education, said, "I'd studied Spanish before in high school, so I really wanted to continue." She said she had two years of experience in Spanish.

Harold L. Miller, dean of the College of Honors and General Education said, "The concept of math itself is a foreign language."

He said both math and languages are considered to be comparable in the skills needed to complete the courses.

Landon said, "Both (math and foreign language) require you to think in that language." She said just like a foreign language makes people think in those words, math makes people think in mathematical terms.

"If it were up to me, I would require both of all students," Miller said. He said he thinks it would benefit the students more to have knowledge of both.

Students can choose to take either foreign language or math to fill their general education requirements, but those seeking to graduate in honors must take both, Landon said.

Those who do decide to take both routes only have to take three arts and sciences electives instead of four, she said.

Many students served foreign language-speaking missions and have already acquired a foreign language.

Michael Wirthlin, 23, a senior from Bloomfield Hills, Mich., majoring in electrical engineering, said he went on a mission to South Africa and learned to speak Afrikaans. He said he decided to take both math and foreign language.

"I did math because it is part of my major anyway," Wirthlin said. "I didn't need to, I wanted to," he said about taking the foreign language. "It was a challenge."

Landon said she doesn't think there are fewer students who have an interest in foreign language. "There are just more students in majors that require math."

Y professor leading Utah nurses group

By ROBERT GRIFFIN
Universe Staff Writer

A BYU assistant professor was recently appointed as president of Utah Nurses Association.

Rosanne Schwartz, a nursing professor, has been a member of the UNA for almost 20 years. She said she has become active in trying to influence the association in the last three years.

Schwartz said she volunteers her time as president and that she is responsible for helping to guide the UNA into the future.

She said the UNA as an organization represents approximately 14,000 registered nurses, the largest group of health care professionals in the state.

Schwartz said the association is also influential in supporting legislation regarding health care professionals. She said the association is supporting legislation asking for more nurses in public schools.

She said the emphasis on nurses in public schools has declined in the past and the schools are falling behind in the health care area; therefore, the UNA is pushing for more support from the state.

Schwartz said she was a practicing nurse for more than 20 years. She has worked in rural areas and in critical care with adults and infants. She has worked at Utah Valley Regional Medical Center and the Salt Lake City LDS Hospital.

She said that as president she is concerned with "the overall well being of the profession in the state." She said she will also try to increase the membership in the association.

Schwartz is an Idaho native and received her bachelor's and master's degrees from BYU in nursing. She also graduated with a doctor's degree from the University of Florida in Gainesville.

BYU should improve harassment policy

Maybe the only good that has come from the eleventh-hour hearings and subsequent confirmation of Clarence Thomas is an increased awareness of sexual harassment in the United States.

Hopefully, this increased awareness has made its way to BYU and has inspired the university to make changes in its sexual harassment policy to further ensure respect and equality to students and employees.

BYU has a long way to go to be able to properly address sexual harassment grievances.

According to BYU's sexual harassment policy, the Equal Employment Opportunity Office handles complaints. The victim of sexual harassment by a university employee also has the right to grieve against BYU if the university fails to take timely action to remedy the matter. However, there are no official grievance procedures when student victims feel they have been harassed by someone who is not a university employee but simply another student.

Honor Code provisions of graciousness, courtesy and integrity should govern student and employee actions, but they don't. So much falls under the jurisdiction of the Honor Code, including dress and grooming standards, Word of Wisdom requirements and morality concerns, that sexual harassment may be overlooked as a "minor" moral infraction.

However, any new awareness of sexual harassment is not risk-free. People are already reluctant to form friendships with co-workers. A polarizing of the sexes is creating an "us against them" mentality. These situations are detrimental to women, because they encourage a distinction, making it impossible for co-workers to associate without the issue of gender looming over.

BYU must change the procedure for handling sexual harassment cases. The university must inform the student body that BYU does indeed have a sexual harassment policy and an official grievance procedure. The university should compile and release figures on the number of students and employees filing sexual harassment claims.

The final, and perhaps most important, change should include the creation of a new office to deal specifically with sexual harassment claims.

The increased awareness and possible sensitivity to harassment make the change accepted and expected. Only after it improves the way it handles sexual harassment claims can the university say what its sexual harassment policy states: "Brigham Young University is committed to assuring an environment for all employees and students where the dignity of each individual is recognized and respected."

Get out while you can by Ruth

Clark

I'm writing a book for college students. "1,000 Ways to Alienate and Annoy Your Roommates so They'll Move Out and Never Expect to Receive a Wedding Announcement From You." My editor suggests shortening it to "Get Out While You Can."

After more than four years of college and living in student housing with other students, I think I'm more than qualified to write this book. I totalled it up the other day, and I have lived with 32 different girls (or should I say women?) throughout my college career, most of whom I'll never see again and wouldn't want to anyway.

I've had your typical, run of the mill roommates, the type everyone has at one time or another. You know, the ones who refuse to buy toilet paper or light bulbs, the ones who eat your food and steal your clothes and always want to borrow your car and then don't pay for their part of the phone bill.

I've also lived with eight or nine engaged people, and their fiancées, it seemed. I lived with one girl who thought I was a foreign student because I'm from New Mexico. Another took seven months to figure out that Germany unified. I've lived with four Relief Society presidents, three second counselors, five first counselors and four daughters of bishops. At one time I lived with five freshman all from podunk towns in Idaho; all five would have seizures whenever New Kids on the Block appeared on MTV. I've lived with a vegetarian, two or three carnivores (they ate fried red meat two or three times a day), a girl who cooked Top Ramen wrong and a girl who tried to keep a year's supply of food in the freezer. There was the one who rented my bed out to her boyfriend and the two who thought spaghetti fights in the living room would be fun (actually, that was kind of fun).

I've written this book in my spare time, mostly during church, to keep my sanity and also to keep from outright killing some of those girls. If getting along with my roommates prepares me for a Celestial marriage, as I've been told so many times in Relief Society and during Sacrament meeting, I think my marriage is going to exist somewhere in Purgatory.

The first thing you must do in getting rid of roommates is make sure that no matter what happens, you aren't blamed, legally prosecuted or called in to talk to your bishop. That would mean no stealing, no threatening and definitely no assaults unless you're at the end of your line.

So, here for your enjoyment are my top 20 personal favorites. If you can't actually do any of these things to your roommates, at least hang it on your fridge or mail it to them.

1. Never speak to them. Go about the apartment/dorm/house as if they don't exist.

2. Some of my roommates don't like answering the phone, even if they're sitting right next to it. So answer the phone yourself, tell the caller they have the wrong number, or even better, accept your roommates' calls in their names.

3. Don't steal their food. Just rearrange the food in their food cupboards, place Ethel's food in Molly's cupboard, put the oatmeal in the postum jar and the postum in the oatmeal box.

4. If they have too much food in the freezer or fridge, give it to the homeless. Or unplug the freezer one day.

5. Talk to yourself about them in front of them.

6. If they leave their clothes in the bathroom, accidentally drop them in the toilet. Or give them to DI.

7. Get up at 3 or 4 in the morning. Walk about and bang things around. Invite dates over.

8. Make strange noises at night when everyone thinks you're asleep. Wake up screaming 3 or 4 times a week, maybe even walk in your sleep, holding a large hunting knife.

9. Flush spoonfuls of their shampoo down the toilet. Don't actually use their shampoo. That way, when they ask, you can deny everything. "Use your shampoo? Oh, no, I'm allergic to papaya."

10. Change their clocks five minutes everyday. Reset their alarms in the middle of the night.

11. Burn incense 24 hours a day. I personally recommend a very strong sandalwood or pinon scent.

12. When you're up at 3 or 4 in the morning, play Bob Marley or Navajo Indian chants, really loud.

13. Hire someone to harass them over the phone, or ask your friends to call you when you're not home and curse them out because you're not there.

14. Dab small finger prints of bleach or Ritz dye on their clothes. Or, put bleach in their laundry detergent.

15. Steal one shoe lace out of each pair of their shoes.

16. Again, when you're up at 3 or 4 in the morning, take a nice hot shower, then turn off the hot water pipe. A few cold showers, and they'll be moving out.

17. Write obscene words with hairspray on their cars. Although this doesn't appear to do anything at first, when it rains, the hairspray will eat away the paint of their car. Or, if you don't like obscene words, try polka dots. Also, use their hairspray when you do this. Note, however, that I've yet to try this, so I'm not sure if it works.

18. Coat the plugs of their appliances with clear fingernail polish. It doesn't damage the appliance at all, save it won't turn on for about 30 frustrating minutes and they'll probably throw it out after 15 minutes.

19. Sign them up for truck driving school, Playboy or Playgirl, a gay newspaper, book or music clubs and the like. Then let them deal with getting off the mailing lists.

20. And as a last resort, and this is a great favorite up here in the news room, crawl into bed with one of them one night and say, "I'm lonely, can I sleep with you?" Pause. "Please hold me." If this doesn't work, then nothing will, so I'd suggest killing them. Mass serial killing seems to be coming back into style, and you can always plead insanity, that they drove you stark raving mad, and the judge would probably understand.

Unhealthy

To the Editor:

I've got another complaint about the McDonald Health Center. I recently graduated from BYU and moved out of state for my husband's job. Shortly before I left BYU, I received prescription from on of the Health Center's gynecologists. When my supply ran out, I notified a local pharmacy so they could transfer the prescription from BYU pharmacy to their pharmacy. When I went to pick up the prescription at my new pharmacy, I was told that they were unable to transfer the prescription because I was no longer a student at BYU. I called the Health Center and spoke to the nurse and told her my dilemma. She told me the same thing — that prescriptions are not transferred once you have left BYU.

So now I have no prescription and no way of being re-examined for who knows how long.

I don't know if I am the only BYU student/alumni who didn't know about this policy or what. Perhaps I didn't read the fine print somewhere, but I suspect that there are BYU students who don't know about this (or where to find out about it), and it may affect them too. Although my prescription is not for a life-threatening illness, I wonder if they would do the same to an insulin dependent diabetic or an epileptic with violent seizures. I've written this letter in hope that others will be aware of this and not get the unpleasant surprise that I have.

Questionable Congress

To the Editor:

I thing that your editorial in the Thursday edition of the Universe was a bit too lenient on those members of the House of Representatives that are guilty of bouncing checks or failing to pay their restaurant tabs or both. True, there are few people who haven't bounced a check at least once in their life. However, there is more to this than a few bounced checks.

A couple of months ago, these very people were screaming for the resignation of Chief of Staff Sinunu, because they considered his use of Air Force jets inappropriate. They said that the "people have a right to know about this," and that "the appearance of impropriety" should be enough to cost him his job. Yet several of these same representatives used an Air Force jet to take a Caribbean vacation, and this was conveniently overlooked. Now we hear that many of these people have been bouncing checks and running up huge restaurant tabs that they then failed to pay. And what do these people say when they are asked about this? They say that it is none of our business who is guilty.

Doesn't this strike you being at least a little hypocritical? If the administrative branch is suspected of doing something that is the least bit questionable ethically, then they want it investigated, and they want it investigated in a public forum. However, let something questionable about the Congress come up, and they say that they will handle it themselves, that we don't need to know the details. This whole thing stinks of hypocrisy. They hold up one standard of conduct for others and a different standard for themselves.

How many of us have bounced thousand dollar checks? How many of us go into restaurants and run up huge bills that we then fail to pay? This is just a symptom of a much bigger problem. These people can't even live on a budget themselves, and they, not the President, are entrusted with the responsibility of writing this country's budget each year. Is it any wonder that the government is up to its ears in debt? I think the names of all representatives that have been involved in this should be made public and that they should be made to answer these charges. If they are guilty, the disciplinary action should be taken against them even to the point of them losing their jobs, if they are innocent, then they can clear their names. As things stand, the whole House of Representatives is under indictment in the eyes of the people, and this doesn't do any of them any good.

Get a haircut

To the Editor:

I have a few words to say to Bob Ahlander. The solution to your friend's problem, is really rather obvious. Tell him to get a hair cut!

Now, I do not doubt in the least that you friend served a faithful mission, I'm sure his temple recommend is valid, and that he is fully active in the Church. But if he wants to live in BYU approved housing, and if he wants to attend BYU-sponsored activities, then he must comply to BYU rules. His temple recommend does not in the least bit exempt him from the same regulations to which we are all subject. A sure sign of pride is thinking the rules apply to everyone else but oneself.

You say you're tired of employees asking him to leave activities. Well, you had better get used to it, because they are not likely to change the rule to accommodate your friend.

You say that Christ himself would not be allowed to stay in approved housing. What a lame excuse. In Christ's time, long hair was normal and acceptable. Maybe you have also noticed that in all the common images of Christ, he is wearing long, white robes. Maybe we ought to suggest to standards that all males should be required to wear robes. What do you think?

On the board of directors of this university there sit prophets of the Lord, and it was these prophets who decreed, "No long hair." This last weekend was General Conference. How many speakers did you count with long hair?

So anyone else who whines and moans about the BYU dress code, stop your murmuring, rise up from the dust and be men. Take the advice of Nephi: the last five words he carved in the gold plates were "And I must obey, Amen."

Press unfair

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the unfortunate way the press had handled the allegations of sexual harassment against Clarence Thomas. I call it unfortunate because the press is unjustly equating a gross crime with a less than criminal act Judge Thomas may or may not have done. We have seen one article after another outlining what sexual harassment is and why it is bad, and in the same instance we see articles trying to equate what Thomas may or may not have done to ally harass. She obviously didn't feel threatened by him, or she wouldn't have kept a professional association with him for so many years. We know that her professional advancement wasn't in jeopardy, since she didn't go on a date with him, but he recommended her as a law professor.

Instead of making a point of these is the press has buried them under a pile of articles that fosters paranoia and ambiguity and doing nothing but cast a "guilty until proven innocent" cloud upon Judge Thomas.

It seems then that the issue is whether not one adult asked another adult out date and if one talked to the other about pornography. Even if he did, although personally approve of pornography, he be kept off the Supreme Court simply because of this reason?

Steve De

Not unanimous

To the Editor:

The letters from Steve Short and Beal on the subject of evolution printed Oct. 9 Universe did not cast much light on this controversial matter. Unfortunately, references given by Short are somewhat dated, although they are standard citations by the creationist movement in the U.S. States.

Surely we do not have the answers to questions about the scientific process involved in the origin of the lifeforms on earth. However, a more recent reference that the current status of scientific understanding on these and many other issues is Scientific Earth History: the Evolution/Creation controversy by Arthur Strahler.

Beal's letter seems to me simply to fine such terms as "creationist" and "evolutionist." Latter-day Saints are not creationists in the current normal usage of that term. For example, the creationist movement, like other things, argues for creation of the earth and its lifeforms from nothing, i.e. ex creation. Perhaps Latter-day Saints should not refer to themselves as either "creationists" or "evolutionists," because of the definitions implied by the baggage these terms carry. Furthermore, Beal's characterization of evolution as "random combination of matter run amok" is entirely erroneous. Perhaps the reference cited above, and others in its bibliography, would help clarify what the theory is, including the role of random mutations and natural selection directing (selecting) mechanism.

Finally, I would like to support the closing thoughts about the dangers of relying selectively to the prophets. The volume packet President Lee has caused to be available in the library is that it gives access to nearly the full range of views expressed in the past by First Presidency Presidents of the Church. In addition, can, with a little more trouble, find the views of many of the apostles who have spoken on this matter in the past. There is no unanimity on this subject. If we consider the views of the prophets and apostles who have spoken on this subject, not selectively taking those whose views coincide with our own, we conclude that this is not a settled question for the Church. Both scientific study and careful study of the scriptures are essential for those who would understand the origin of life and the development of lifeforms.

Ombudsman mediates for students

What is an Ombudsman? The word comes from Swedish, and it means "citizen's protector." The position was established in 1809 as a Swedish government agency responsible for hearing citizen's complaints and grievances.

Many civic institutions in the United States have likewise utilized the concept of the Ombudsman, saving much time and money that otherwise would have been lost in endless bickering or unnecessary legal battles.

BYU has been making use of the Office of the Ombudsman since 1970. The investigative staff of the Ombudsman's Office is comprised of students who are willing and able to assist other students with a variety of questions and problems. Although staff investigators do not claim to be lawyers, the office is there to help answer questions relating to housing, consumer information, taxes, legal and other university services.

The Office of the Ombudsman is a great asset to each student at BYU. Because of this status, the office values its neutrality and puts between two parties. This is because one of the roles of the office is mediator. We encourage disputing individuals or groups to talk out their problems; the situation becomes too difficult. As a result, the Ombudsman's Office saves thousands of dollars and much time each year, resolving problems as peacefully as possible.

If you have a question or are interested in volunteering in the Ombudsman's Office, please call 378-4132, or come visit our office on the 4th floor of the Wilkinson Center.

Women hoopers working to return winning tradition

JEANIE CASTLE
Inverse Sports Writer

For the third time's the charm for the women's basketball team. This year, with a team full of talent, the players are dedicated to returning winning basketball to BYU.

This is the year to see big changes in the women's basketball program at BYU, said Jeanie Wilson, who is in her third year as head coach of BYU women's basketball. "This is the third year of building the system, and it is going to finally pay off."

With youth and talent are the strongest for the team this year and any of the players could see some playing time, Wilson said.

One key to our team this year is youth and talent," said Kim Talbot, a senior from Orem. "We are excited to play, and with so much youth on the team, we could feel comfortable with anyone on the court at any time."

Of the eight returning players, three are seniors, and five new recruits. The team has a great balance between the experienced players and newcomers. All 13 players are very important as part of the team.

BYU has a natural recruiting advantage to attract Mormon athletes with healthy lifestyles. When combined with BYU's atmosphere which is conducive to positive training, it is a great advantage for developing a well-rounded, very competitive team, Wilson said.

A recruiting system was a vital addition to the BYU women's basketball program. Glenna de Lisle became the recruiting coordinator and an assistant coach.

"We established a recruiting system which is a necessary step to have a winning team," de Lisle said. "In relation to Stanford where top academic athletes pursue education, we relied heavily on getting top Mormon athletes to come to BYU, and so far it's working really well."

As the team begins to prepare for the season, the concentration is on getting in shape and the emphasis is on stepping up defense.

"This year, we expect to have a great team defensively," Wilson said. "Scoring will go up because the defense will give the players more time and opportunity to get to the basket."

According to Wilson, the team has a whole different attitude. The players are real winners and believe in themselves. Confidence in the players is important for the final test — playing on the court.

"The coaches work the players hard, expect the best, try to instill confidence and when the team gets out on the floor, we just let them play," Wilson said. "We try to work on what we do best and perfect it."

In last year's pre-season, the women's basketball team played 11 of the top 20 teams in the nation and seven out of those 11 teams went on to play in the NCAA Championships.

Women's soccer team stood up' by Utes

THOMAS PETERSON
Inverse Sports Writer

Seventeen BYU women and two referees were stood up Tuesday night.

The BYU women's soccer team, along with the referees, traveled to Salt Lake City to play the University of Utah, only the Utes failed to show up.

The Cougars arrived for the 5:30 p.m. scheduled game at Salt Lake's Riverside Park, but ended up playing each other and practicing before the game at 6 p.m.

"We set up the nets and put up the goals and then had to take them down," said forward Julie Anderson, junior, majoring in recreation management. "Maybe they didn't want to play us, or didn't have enough time to play, or maybe they forgot."

Peterson said.

It was a change of scenery for the team, said forward Kristin Gebhart, a senior from Aurora, Colo.

"The rest from play should be good for us. It should help us focus more mentally and be more motivated for our California games."

The Cougars will face the No. 13-ranked University of California at Davis Saturday. Stanford, ranked No. 10 in Division I will challenge the Cougars Oct. 21.

"The referees said we did a good job," Anderson said. "We told the referees that it was the first time they didn't make any mistakes."

"It shows a lack of commitment to soccer in Utah," said Jill Gebhart, Kristin's twin sister. "It hurts our play when we have to play faster teams after playing teams that don't care," Jill said. "There is not a lot of competition to prepare us for the strong California teams."

Jill said the Cougars will work on maintaining high-speed play and minimizing mental errors to prepare for Stanford next week.

Former Y players honor coach Tucker at Cougar Golf Day

By THOMAS PETERSON
Inverse Sports Writer

Provo's Riverside Country Club hosted the 1991 Cougar Golf Day Monday honoring Karl Tucker, coach of the BYU men's golf team. Tucker has coached the team for the past 31 years.

Participating in the tournament for the former coach, were many former Cougar golfers and PGA superstars including Johnny Miller, Mike Reid, Pat McGowan, Bobby Clampett, Keith Clearwater and many others.

The ninth biennial Cougar Golf Day, which began in 1974, featured 36 former BYU golfers, six of whom are currently on the PGA Tour.

"This represents a combination of 30 years working with guys you like to help," Tucker said.

"They have kept our program going and been the beacon for our young guys to follow. Their continued return to Cougar Golf Day is a compliment to BYU, our program and me."

Cougar Golf Day began with a long-drive contest that was won by current Cougar golfer Eric Rustand, who outdrove the pros with a whopping 337-yard drive.

Pro winners of the long-drive were Clearwater and Dick Zokol who tied with 325-yard drives.

The feature of Cougar Golf Day was an 18-hole shotgun scramble with pros, amateurs and Riverside Country Club members.

Pro winner of the tournament was Steve Schneider. Schneider shot a 5-under par 67 for the tournament to win the $600 prize money. Following Schneider was Clearwater and Rick Fehr who tied for second with a 68.

Because of NCAA rulings, BYU's current players were not allowed to compete in most of the day's events.

Police officers in Milwaukee are biased

Journal of the Press

MILWAUKEE — Milwaukee police officers sometimes mistreat minorities and should get better sensitivity training, a commission charged the department's handling of the Jeffrey Dahmer murder case today.

The commission said it had found evidence in which Milwaukee police discriminated against minorities by selectively enforcing laws, mistreating minorities and sometimes ignoring residents' complaints.

Witnesses perceive that members of their group are singled out for mistreatment and selection. That these perceptions are a considerable truth and remain beyond question," said Albert DiUlio, Marquette University president and commission member.

DiUlio was arrested in July and charged with killing 17 boys and men, most of them in Wisconsin, over the past 13 years. Remains of 15 victims were found in his apartment.

The police department was bitterly divided when it was disclosed that it had received neighbors' complaints about Dahmer, who is white, and let him live there with a minor child, who later wound up among the victims.

The commission gave Police Chief David Reola 90 days to submit a plan to begin revamping the department's relationship to the community, particularly minorities.

Motorcycle helmet campaign aimed at college-aged riders

By TODD TURNER

To wear or not to wear a motorcycle helmet is a matter of choice for riders 19 and older in Utah. To help influence riders' decisions, the Utah Department of Health is promoting a major motorcycle helmet awareness campaign targeted at the state's college population, with a simple message: "Get it on."

The Intermountain Health Care and Utah Department of Health are working together to provide "Get It On" helmet signs for university and college campuses in northern Utah.

Lt. Steve Baker, manager of BYU Parking Services, will accept 14 signs to post at the university's motorcycle parking areas.

"I'm happy to work with the Health Department, and I think the program is a good idea," Baker said.

The helmet safety program is an effort to encourage students who are motorcyclists to wear helmets to and from school. Studies show most fatal accidents occur at 35 mph or less during short trips relatively close to the origin of the trip.

"This type of (motorcycle) injury can physically and financially devastate a person's life."

— Ron Liston, administrative director of UVRMC Rehabilitation Center

According to the Utah Department of Health, head injury is the leading cause of death in motorcycle crashes, and wearing a helmet is the single most important factor in surviving a motorcycle crash.

About 900 Utah motorcyclists crashed in 1990, and only 23 percent were wearing helmets. Eighteen people died, and only five were wearing helmets, said the Utah Department of Health.

Korey Thurber, 23, a senior majoring in marketing/finance from Lisbon, Maryland, said, "On a nice sunny day you just hate to wear a helmet. The only time I wear one is at night and in the rain."

"I think people should have the choice of whether or not to wear a helmet. In Maryland and here in Utah there is no law saying you have to. I would definitely oppose a law requiring everyone to wear a helmet," Thurber said. "A guy I knew was killed instantly on his motorcycle and he was wearing a helmet. You just have to be careful all the time with or without a helmet," Thurber said.

Ron Liston, administrative director of Utah Valley Regional Medical Center's Rehabilitation Center estimates that acute care services for a head injury range from $30,000 to $150,000. Rehabilitation may run into hundreds of thousands of dollars for the first year. Considering the many years of follow-up care, a head injury could easily cost a family up to $1 million, Liston said.

"This type of injury can physically and financially devastate a person's life. This is what the helmet sign campaign is trying to prevent," Liston said.

Employee safety record pays off for Provo

Money and praise was freely given to and gladly accepted by Provo City Tuesday night at the Provo City Council Meeting.

A check for $11,023 was given to Mayor Joseph A. Jenkins from the Worker's Compensation Fund of Utah.

The refund shows the importance of Provo City workers who are safe, Jenkins said, and as a result, don't get hurt as often.

Utah has the nation's fifth lowest compensation rates and Blaine Palmer, a representative from the Worker's Compensation Fund of Utah, said the low rates are only possible because of the safety of employees like those in Provo.

Provo was praised by the Waste Management Company for being a leader in solid waste practices.

Provo pioneered automatic garbage devices that are currently being used around the country, Dave Gunn, director of public services, said.

These automatic garbage disposal systems are safer and reflect on Provo City employees, Gunn said.

"Recycling programs in Provo are the best in Utah," Gunn said, "and they are actually working programs and not just ideas."

The council also agreed to spend $235,000 for the purchase of 27 aircraft hangers for the Provo City Airport.

Jenkins said the airport is going through a major expansion with an expected $35,000 a year income as a result.

"The city really won't be paying for the new hangers because the expected income will pay for them," Jenkins said.

The council also agreed to sell 27 acres to Novell, Inc. for their future expansion.

Novell has already purchased 15 of the 27 acres for $94,000 an acre, Jenkins said.

"The main thing holding up the sale of the rest of the property is a new road that will run through the property," Jenkins said.

"A new off/on ramp from I-15 will be added to the new road and that's still in the planning stages," Jenkins said.

Orem incumbent drops out of race for City Council

By JENNY MOULTON

Incumbent candidate, George Baily, withdrew from Orem City Council race in the city council meeting Tuesday.

Baily said his reasons for withdrawal came from the recounts that took place to decide who would become the second candidate for the two-year position on the Council. The city performed several recounts which in some cases put Baily on top and in others put candidate Clyde Weeks in the race. In the last recorded count, Baily came out on top by one vote only.

Baily chose to withdraw rather than have another recount go before a judge. He said that type of situation would undermine the democratic process. Baily also said the process would take time and would not give the candidate sufficient time to run a good campaign.

Baily turned the candidacy over to Weeks and wished him well. "I regret that things turned out this way, I have enjoyed serving on Orem City Council," Baily said.

Weeks was surprised by Baily's withdrawal, but accepted the candidacy. "I was stunned by the close margin," he said.

The City Council also approved an amended site plan of a development presented by University Square Associates and would be located at 200 East and 1300 South in Orem.

After previous meetings with citizens in the area, and discussion with the council in the meeting, a proposal was presented by the council which satisfied the needs of both the citizens and the developers.
